

People who do Good Things

computer man

The genealogy community is busy at work, collecting and conserving old records and tracing lineages for their posterity. They do not waste their time and energy parading around the country protesting something. Instead, great energy is expended towards the discovery of family members who helped to make America great and leaving a proper heritage for their children. Because if the children have knowledge of the battles and experiences of their ancestors, then they possess a distinctly special awareness of themselves and the importance of doing good things. Something they will not get from public schools.